

From Baltimore Maryland, Carlos moved overseas at the age of 6. Growing up in the Caribbean and in South America he was exposed to many different cultures and languages (fluently speaks English, Spanish, Italian and French). He had his first 16mm movie film camera at the age of 14, and from then on, he has never been able to put it down.

Back states side, Carlos had instructors of the caliber of Eugene Clark as an undergraduate student and Dian Fossey as a graduate student, both National Geographic sponsored explorers and he could not resist at the first opportunity to go back to South America and film documentaries, and so it started with Jacques Cousteau in 1979 and after graduation for National Geographic from 1988 until 1994. Later in life, he moved to Europe and worked for RCTV, later TVE / Spain, RTL PLUS in Germany, Thalassa/France, Discovery Channel/Latin America and Discovery Networks.

Carlos has shot many TV commercial for brands like Rolex, Samsung, Toyota, Pepsi, Maybelline, Revlon, Chevrolet, Ford and many others, winning prestigious awards for best cinematography by the National Association of Advertisers, Latin Grammy and Banff.

Carlos taught Camera Operation & Cinematography at the National School of Cinematography for 2 years and taught Cinematography and Camera Operation as a full time professor at CNM in Albuquerque, New Mexico before moving to Colorado.